TOURIST SEASON EARLY THIS YEAR

Road Maintenance and Construction Well Under Way

Maine's annual tourist business which each year brings to the state some $120,000,000 is due for a substantial increase this summer according to the Maine Development Commission. Fine weather and good roads have started the influx of out-of-state visitors and reports of record catches of trout and salmon indicate that the anglers are flocking to the state for the spring fishing. The Commission of Inland Fisheries and Game regards the sale of 317 non-resident licenses for the first three months of the year, a figure which exceeds by nearly 300 the total for the first quarter of 1930. Total income received by the Commission for the first three months of this year is reported at $2,782, as compared with $1800 for the same period last year.

Approximately 27,000 non-resident anglers came to Maine last year to fish the state's 5000 lakes and streams. Early reports this year indicate that this figure will be surpassed.

Trout and salmon are rising to the fly on Sebago and the lakes of Maine's great southern fishing district. The spring is moving northward and with it the sportsmen to the Belgrade, the Rangeley, and the Grand Lakes. The great northward march will bring them to the Dead River, Moosehead, the A. A. lagash, the Mt. Katahdin country, the Fish River Chain, all the fishing waters for which Maine is world famous.

Maine's 33,000 square miles of area offer such a variety of waters, that the fishing is of almost year round possibilities. Game fish of almost all varieties abound in its lakes and streams.

The sea offers the Atlantic salmon which brings throngs of sportsmen to the Bangor Pool and Denys Pool at Denysville. But the Maine coast stretching nearly 2500 miles through innumerable bays, inlets and fine beaches offers a wide variety of sea fishing too. Off the rocks there are sunners, tinned and pollock. While further out there are cod and haddock, dogfish and horse mackerel. The Maine horse mackerel is identical to the California tuna, but in Maine this fish favorite with light tackle fishermen runs to enormous size. Specimens have been taken that weighed in excess of 350 pounds.

Maine is the motorist's paradise. Twenty-five thousand miles of fine highways offer easy access to any part of the state, and a choice of any number of scenic tours along a coast line unsurpassed in any other part of the world. Through regions of mountains, forests, lakes, farmlands, through fine cities and snug little villages. Within its borders Maine offers the visitor more variety than any other state in the Union. There are 1399 wooded islands in the state, the largest of which is Mount Desert, containing 60,000 acres, and offering the unexcelled scenery of Acadia National Park, the only sea-coast National Park in the Union.

Settled some fourteen years before the Pilgrims landed Maine is rich in historical associations. Ancient landmarks are to be found all over the state. Among the most interesting relics of the wars of the old days are nearly twenty forts and blockhouses many of them built when the English struggled with the French and Indians for supremacy in the New World.

The State Highway Commission got off to an earlier start this year than ever before. Some $10,000,000 will be expended for new construction while an additional $3,265,000 will go for maintenance. Six hundred and twenty-three miles of concrete bituminous macadam and gravel roads will be added to the system with some 5000 miles of present road under constant patrol maintenance.

With all contracts for new construction let, work is being pushed ahead rapidly. The seven mile stretch of concrete planned for Wells on Route 1 will finish the concrete highway from Wells to Kennebunk. Within a week or two work will start on the concrete stretches between Brunswick and Yarmouth, at Wiscasset, Warren, Polk, Carmel and other points called for by the program.

The work of fitting in holes and smoothing out gravel and macadamized roads is being carried on by a constant maintenance patrol crew of 700 men. At the height of the summer the number will increase to 2500. Some 12,000 men are engaged in construction work on the Maine highways during July and August. Out of a total of 75 bridges planned for this year, 21 have been started.

It is likewise planned to eliminate a number of dangerous crossings and other highway barriers among them the

GOULD LOSES OPENING

GAME 11-3

Norway High pounded out 15 hits for 12 runs to defeat Gould Academy 11-3 in the opening Oxford County schedule. Hinkley opened on the mound for the locals and was hit hard, allowing 12 hits and 10 runs in five innings. Quimby relieved Hinkley in the sixth inning and pitched beautiful ball allowing only three hits and one run in the last four innings.

The return to eligibility of Roberts who plays third base makes it possible to put Brown in the outfield where he belongs. Mark Hamlin's injury has improved to such an extent that he too will be able to play again. These two men in the outfield, along with Hinkley or Quimby, will make a strong outfield.

Bud Browne with two hits to his credit led the offense. Only four other hits were made by the losers. Yenton with two doubles and two singles was the hitting star of the game for Norway. Lovejoy, Coffin, Jackson, and Frost contributed two hits apiece for Norway.

The inexperienced Gould team made 10 errors, throwing the ball away time and again on foolish plays. Norway made five errors but were not critical.

With the return to the fold of two so far as scoring runs were concerned, more regulars, making possible a shift in the lineup, the team should show considerable better form for the remainder of the season, providing all players can remain eligible.

MRS. CHARLES EAMES

Mrs. Mary Eames, wife of Charles Eames, died at the C. M. G. Hospital, Lewiston, Thursday night. Mrs. Eames was the daughter of John and Helen Stearns Eames of Sunday River, Newry. She spent her girlhood in her native town.

After her marriage to Charles Eames of Newry they went to live on a farm at Middle Intervale, where she has lived for about 10 years. One child was born to Mr. and Mrs. Eames who passed away when very young. They then took into their home the infant daughter of her sister whom they have brought up and loved like an own daughter, and who has always lived with them, the comfort and cheer of her foster mother during years of falling illness.

Mrs. Eames was a woman loved by all who knew her, a devoted wife, a kind and obliging neighbor and one who will be missed. She is survived by her husband, one sister, Mrs. Charles Baker, and one brother, Albert Baker, both of Andover. Three nieces, Mrs. Frances Baker Stevens of Bethel, when she brought up; Mrs. Alice Baker, wife of Mr. E. H. Baker, and Mrs. Helen Baker, wife of Mr. Charles Eames of South Portland.

CAN I Learn
to Fly?—Dr.—
WILLIAM R. NELSON

Three Point Landing
LITTLE by little the student pilot takes on more and more responsibility in handling the plane. And he learns each step, or half-step, by that sort of all systems—experience.

The next lesson was a continuation of the last one. But, and I didn't realize it at the time, my instructor added a responsibility he had been carrying for me.

After I had taxied out, taken off and was climbing apparently satisfactorily, to the 1000-foot level where most of my lessons took place, my instructor spoke through the tube connected to my ears.

"As your altimeter shows 1000 feet or about that, push forward on the stick and put the plane in level flight. Then cut the motor to 1450 revolutions per minute. That is cruising speed for this plane. Look at your airspeed indicator. On a normal day it should register about 70 miles an hour at 1450 r. p. m."

As we reached the pattern, turning, leveling out, flying straight ahead, again, leveling out, finally making the third turn, he spoke again.

"Now cut the motor and start your glide. Hold the nose down to the glide and remember to run the motor to clear it. Keep these wings up. That's it. Now relax. This is fun. Let's see you smile!" and he turned around and grinned back at me.

My instructor was getting a little better. I was beginning to "feel" the plane change of position and loss of speed, and quickly noticed whenever a wing was "down" which meant we were going to stall.

"Watch out! Now close and judge your altitude by looking by looking at the ground. Don't look at the altimeter. Keep your eyes on the ground. Make it a habit to keep the plane from stalling. That's the first lesson."

I was a three-point landing. The plane and I landed in the grass. The instructor said I was doing it. I was a three-point landing. The plane and I landed in the grass. The instructor said I was doing it.

Except for my instructor's remark, I was now "flying the ship" completely. I took it out, back off, made the turn, reduced the engine speed to "cruising" and the glide to earth. "Heard" the motor, and made the landing.

I did all of it, but the way I felt, I had to do it to do it alone.

HOW

OLD NAMES OF GARMENTS HAVE BEEN PRESERVED.
Few persons realize what an intricate jumble of past conventions and customs we carry about on our backs in the clothes we wear. Some features in them have been preserved almost unchanged right down from Greece and Anglo-Saxon England, others are traditions that have lost all meaning or the words themselves have had a new meaning given to them. writes L. F. Easterbrook in John O'London's Weekly.

The very word "garment," for instance, means "ornamentation" or adornment, rather than a useful necessity, and the fashionable lady who chooses her latest "robe" (the dress) that the word is indirectly derived through the German from "rob" and once referred only to the spolia stripped from a dead enemy. Her "two-piece" sports costume is only one of the many modes which she has stolen from the earliest days—in this case from the ladies of Greece and Crete, who wore a body "corset" and skirt. Others she has stolen from men, for men were the first to wear gowns, robes, frocks, blouses, and even gaiters. Gowns were originally made of fur and were worn by monks, as also were frocks as the extinct phrase "unfrocks" a priest still betokens. "Blouse" is a French word that referred to the smock or over all worn by peasants, although in the beginning it was a silk garment that knights wore to prevent the rain from spoiling their armor.

How Yale Men Came to Adopt Bulldog Mascot

The origin of Yale's famous mascot, the bulldog, was explained in a recent issue of the Yale Alumni Weekly. A fine-bred bulldog named Handsome Dan was bought in 1880 by Andrew B. Graves, Yale banker, then a sophomore. The dog became a favorite on the campus and was paraded at football games by his caretaker, a white-haired old man called Pop Smith. Subsequently, songs were written about Handsome Dan, including the popular "Bulldog, Bulldog, Bow Wow, Wow" and the dog was recognized generally as Yale's symbol. Handsome Dan won more than 100 prizes at dog shows before he died in 1893. His skin was stuffed and mounted and is now on exhibition in the trophy room.

How Snakes Digest Eggs

Many species of snakes eat hen eggs by swallowing them whole; in fact that is the only way they could eat them. Generally the eggs are crushed by constriction soon after they are swallowed, although they would undoubtedly be digested in time by the powerful juices of the snake's stomach even if they were not broken. Sometimes snakes kill snakes which eat hen eggs by placing their mouth over the reptiles' and then they die. As a rule, egg-eating snakes do not distinguish between artificial and genuine eggs and they will swallow glass nest eggs as readily as they will real eggs. A glass or porcelain egg cannot pass through the snake's digestive system and it proves fatal to the reptile. The following snakes are common in the United States, are known to eat hen eggs: Indigo snake, copperhead, black snake, fox snake, corn snake, pilot snake, pine snake, bull snake, gopher snake, king snake.

How to Water Trees

Transplanted trees usually need artificial watering for at least two or three years during the dry seasons. Specialists in the United States Department of Agriculture recommend that such trees be given a good watering once or twice a week rather than a little water every day. A mulch of straw or leaves around the tree will help to conserve the supply of water in the soil.

How Landlady Ruined Mine

Knowledge is a great asset, but it is no use unless you know how to use it. A landlady who was a great expert on the New York City subway system at New York City, found that the service and some valuable knowledge were lost. The landlady had been a great expert on the New York City subway system at New York City, found that the service and some valuable knowledge were lost.

How to Clean Paintings

How paintings faded over the surface of oil paintings will remove dust and dirt. Wipe with clean cloth. This will restore original brightness to the pictures.

How to Judge a Tree

The average hardwood tree which is 21 inches in diameter 5 feet from the ground will yield one cord of wood.

How Worms Get in Chestnuts

The worms inside chestnuts are attracted to the nuts from eggs laid in the blossoms by beetles.

How Freezing Affects Water

Water expands when it freezes, and 100 parts of water yields 110 parts of ice.

MILLETVILLE

Mrs. Sol Jackson gave two monologues in costume at the vaudeville following the men's supper at the Universalist Church in Norway. "Mrs. Cloney's Husbands" in gay Irish costume, and "William Henry on the Bus" in fat schoolboy make up. Both called for encores. Rev. Conrad Rheinberger gave a ventriloquist act and closed with a faithful magic light of hand performance. He is more than an amateur as he very nearly earned his way through college by his talent in both lines. Ray Lord gave a toe dancing act and Miss Clara Adkins and Mr. Rheinberger gave a catchy one word conversational skit, "The Filtration."

Everyone turned out at Grange Saturday to see the degree team work the first and second degrees in a splendid way. Millettville is well represented.

Mrs. Adelaide Young is Lecturer. Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Buck, Secretary and Treasurer, Mrs. Lillian Thurston, Flora, and Mrs. Eva Jackson, leader of song in the degree team. Hattie Buck is Mistress of the tableaux which are very beautiful and impressive. It was Young People's Day and they filled the chairs in an able manner. Mr. Babb, County Com. Agriculture, gave a most interesting talk on our Hawaiian Possessions. He had 100 beautiful colored slides to illustrate his lecture and make us almost enjoy the trip in reality.

Eva Marion Jackson celebrated her 17th birthday April 22 in the dormitory at Boston University with her girl friends at the college. A birthday cake, the gift of her mother, was the cause of much merriment as the different symbols were discovered by the girls.

Mrs. Frank Abbott enjoyed the Patriots' Day party at Club Hall and also attended Grange Saturday at Norway.

TWO-MINUTE SERMON

by REV. GEORGE HENRY

EDUCATION

Which is the more important—that we give our boys and girls a secular education or that we teach them God's Word; that we give them a religious education? You hesitate to answer? Put it thus: Are not the opportunities presented to our youth for acquiring a secular education out of all proportion to the facilities provided for religious instruction? Is not the public school program too big and the Bible school program too little? Think it over. Call the roll of those men on whom the nation is laying the burden of responsibility from the great president of the great republic down, and they will be found, almost without exception to have spent their youth in the atmosphere of a Christian home, a Christian Bible school and a Christian church. The great problems of the world are not economic nor financial, but moral. Since education is an essential in the progress that will fit youth for the great tasks, the church must be more interested in the matter of their education.

In Spite of Lulu Otis

By JANE OSBORN

(Copyright 1931, McClure Newspaper Syndicate, Inc.)

AFTER Eleanor Pickett had worked as stenographer in the insurance office of Mansard & Son she had to admit that she was in love with young George Mansard, and she had more over to admit that she was jealous of Lulu Otis, the plump, strawberry blond girl who sat at the telephone switchboard in the outer office of the Granger establishment, and spoke of herself as Mr. Mansard's private secretary. The fact that Eleanor took Mr. Mansard's dictation and had got so that she could attend to much of his correspondence alone made no difference to Lulu.

"You're terribly old fashioned," Lulu had told Eleanor on several occasions. "If you want to get in right with a boss you've got to show more pep. Of course while I'm here all he expects of you is to take his dictation, but if I were to leave why he'd want a private secretary. I'd like to see you get the job, but you've got to remember that a man like Mr. Mansard needs a private secretary with an awful lot of pep—some one to kind of back him up."

"But you're not thinking of leaving?" asked Eleanor timidly.

"Well, you know, Lulu—a girl like me doesn't intend to work forever. I've only just got my freedom." By freedom Eleanor knew that Lulu referred to her divorce papers which she had received only a few weeks before. "And I'm not going to be in too big a hurry this time. But you can bet that I've more than one string to my bow."

Eleanor felt her cheeks burn with suspicious jealousy. She had seen Bob Mansard talking for a full half hour with Lulu that very morning. "You know I always wear earrings to the office. Personally I think it's worth while to doll up a bit. The boss likes it and a lot of nice fellows come in here all the time. Of course you've got a nice complexion but just a bit of makeup does help a girl's appearance an awful lot."

Eleanor made up her mind to stop on her way home that evening and buy a pair of earrings and some rouge and lipstick.

The next morning Eleanor purposefully reached the office ten minutes ahead of her usual time of arrival so that she could be seated at her desk before Mr. Mansard or Lulu arrived. She didn't want to be too conspicuous in her new earrings.

But apparently the bit of makeup or the earrings did make a difference because when Bob Mansard came into the room he whistled.

"Why the paint?" he asked in a tone of unusual familiarity. "And great scott, dangle-dangles on her ears besides."

"Don't you like them?" asked Eleanor putting her hands up to the earrings.

"Oh, they're all right—only I think I like you better 'n' natural."

Eleanor swiftly pulled off the earrings.

Weeks and months went on and the situation as far as Eleanor and Bob Mansard were concerned went on without change. It seemed, however, to Eleanor as if she noted signs of increasing intimacy between him and Lulu. Doubtless now that she had really gained her "freedom" he was courting her in good earnest. Then came one Saturday morning when Eleanor could not fall to see an unwanted familiarity in Lulu's eyes.

"Heard the excitement?" Lulu asked Eleanor and then went on to explain "I'm leaving for good in a few hours, Lulu. I just came around to sort of say good-by. I'm going to get married Monday."

"I—hope you'll be very happy—Oh, I'm sure you will," stammered Eleanor, and then declining the answer to the question—"May I know the name of the lucky man?"

Lulu's "You ask Mr. Mansard after I am gone" left no doubt whatever in Eleanor's mind.

Of course Eleanor didn't ask Mr. Mansard anything about it but just went to her desk and worked like a Trojan all morning. At half-past eleven Bob Mansard drew up a chair beside her desk and dropped limply into it.

"She's gone at last," he sighed. "Lord knows how I've been looking forward to this moment."

"You mean—Mrs. Otis—Lulu?" asked Eleanor timidly.

"Lulu, indeed," said Robert. "And now Eleanor I'm going to make a long story short. I've loved you from the first day you came and I've never dared tell you until now."

"But why did you have to wait?" she asked bewildered.

"Because I couldn't bare to be alone here with her—with Lulu—I was afraid she would never leave. You've no idea how she bossed me and bullied me before you came, and I didn't dare discharge her."

"But I thought she thought you were one of the fellows to her?"

"Maybe she did," sighed Bob and then taking Eleanor's little hand in his. "But I intended her to be a sensible friend of mine with a load of money. But don't let's talk about that. Eleanor—please tell me you love me a little."

Naturally. "I had a fall last night which rendered me unconscious for eight hours."

"Really? Where did you fall?"

"I fell asleep,"—Eleanor.

The Boyhood of Famous Americans

By J. V. Fitzgerald

George F. Baker

Uncle John could sit on his porch and take it easy while the other farmers were hard at work. He lived well and enjoyed himself. His nephew wondered how a man could have all the necessities of life, and some of the luxuries, without having to work. Being of an inquiring mind he asked for the answer to such a puzzle. He was told that his uncle had an income from his savings and was able to live on the interest of his money.

That was how George F. Baker got his first lesson in thrift and in the value of saving and investing. He was visiting his grandparents in Dedham, Mass., where he spent much of his vacations as a boy, when he learned the lesson that was to help make him one of the world's leading bankers and enable him to amass a tremendous fortune.

George F. Baker was born in Troy, N. Y., in 1840. His father was a merchant, who at one time had a shoe business in New York city. The older Baker didn't enjoy buying and selling. He became a reporter under Horace Greeley on the New York Tribune. He specialized in politics. He became a Washington correspondent for his paper, later holding numerous political positions.

His son was eight years old when the family moved to Brooklyn. Young George went to school in Williamsburg, but spent much time with his grandparents in Massachusetts. The country air agreed with him. He thrived on it and became a sturdy and robust youngster.

It was at Dedham that he laid the foundation for the strong constitution that has enabled him to be active for so many years. There also, through the example of his uncle, he learned the lesson in finance that helped him in laying the foundation for his great fortune. He earned his first money, during a vacation at Dedham, by gathering cranberries left under the bushes by the pickers.

He carried the berries to the barn in pails, dumped them in a sack, that was stored until the coming of the New England winter, and when it was full and all the berries salvaged, he sold the batch for $7. That was good money for a boy in those days before the Civil war. Young Baker didn't waste it on candy or entertainment. With the example of his uncle in mind he saved it.

The youthful financier finished his education at Seward university at Florida, N. Y., when he was sixteen years old. His first job was in a small Albany bank. His father, whose interest in politics had gained him an election to the state legislature, was secretary to Gov. Myron H. Clark at the time.

The young man worked hard learning the rudiments of the banking business, but he had it up to enter him after the fashion of the south of the period. He drove his own horse and buggy. He got his exercise by rowing on the upper Hudson.

Sculling was a great sport on the river at Albany and Troy in those days. There were good boat clubs and good oarsmen. Young Baker was one of the best. He was skilled enough to win a sculling championship of the upper Hudson. He was also active in church and lecture work.

He was badly injured in a railroad accident in 1858. For a time it was thought one of his legs would have to be amputated. He recovered and served as secretary and assistant military secretary to Gov. Edwin D. Morgan, who was chief executive of the state at the outbreak of the Civil war.

Before this he had worked as a clerk in the state banking department. His pay there was only $200 a year, but he managed to save $100 of his first year's salary. His father was in Washington at secretary to William H. Seward and young Baker returned to the banking department when Governor Morgan retired from office.

He was known as the best informed clerk there. His knowledge soon gave him an opportunity to enter the banking business for himself. He became interested in the plan of Secretary of the Treasury Chase to sell bonds through banks and to form banks which could place bonds themselves for the circulation of currency up to 90 per cent of their value.

He talked the proposition over with John Thompson, a New York financier, and in 1853 they launched the First National bank with a capital of $200,000. Thompson offered the young banker all the stock he wanted and promised to carry it for him. But George Baker, at the time, didn't believe in borrowing money. Some misguiding friend, apparently, had warned him against being a borrower.

So he used only his own savings to buy stock. His next step permitted him to buy thirty shares. He also became a teller and before long the cashier of the bank. He prospered and later borrowed the money with which to get control of the institution which he was destined to make one of the most successful financial concerns in the world.

LAKEWOOD PLAYERS REASON TO OPEN ON JUNE 8th

Herbert L. Sweet, Manager of Lakewood, returned Friday from New York where he has completed arrangements for the 31st season of the Lakewood Players. Mr. Sweet, in speaking of the coming Lakewood season, said: "Mr. Howard Lindsay who selected the cast for us has devoted much time this winter to our Lakewood affairs and with him I met every member of the new company which is to open at Lakewood on Monday, June 8th. After we had completed our interviews Mr. Lindsay said to me, 'Do you realize this is the best company we have ever sent up to Lakewood from New York? I am convinced that if none of these people are obliged to cancel their engagement that it is the outstanding company of all time.' The Lakewood Players will have largely a new cast this year, although of about 26 players who have been engaged for the season, there will be a few of the favorites of previous years including Arthur Byron, Wallis Clark, Peg Entwistle, Houston Richards and Thurston Hall.

Lakewood Inn will open on the same day as the Theatre under the management as last year of Wentworth L. Hayes, who has completed a most efficient organization.

The Lakewood Bungalows will shortly be ready for the season and an unusual number of conventions are being booked for the early season starting with the New England Division of the National Electric Light Association on May 28th.

The Lakewood Country Club will open with a dance on Saturday night, May 29th, and this year Lakewood will have its own orchestra of eight pieces under the direction of Lou LaSack.

Since the close of last season a crew of carpenters have been working all winter and have made important improvements on six bungalows, bringing them up to the well known Lakewood standard.

Altogether it looks like a fine season for Lakewood and with the large convention business that has been booked the season should be a busy one from the start.

RUBINSTEIN CLUB CONCERT

The Rubinstein Club of New York, Mrs. William R. Chapman President, gave its closing concert for the season on Tuesday evening, in the ball-room of The Plaza, before a most distinguished audience. The Club was assisted by Mr. Percy Grainger, the distinguished composer-pianist, and Miss Rose Tentoni, dramatic soprano, of the Metropolitan Opera House. The work of these two fine artists was greatly appreciated by the audience, and many encores were granted. Dr. William R. Chapman presented ten new part songs, one just composed, "The Call of the May-Day Dancers," dedicated to the Rubinstein Club, was given for the first time. This Club has long been known and recognized as the finest choral organization in New York, and we doubt if their equal can be found in any city in America. Such wonderful phrasing, and responsive singing to the slightest wish of the conductor, shows that they were drilled to a hair's finish from the wonderful effects produced. Many encores were given, and his new composition was obliged to be repeated. Dr. Chapman received many compliments on this work, among them the following tribute from Mr. Percy Grainger:

"Dear Dr. William Rogers Chapman: I want to tell you what a very great pleasure I have just had in hearing your delightful 'The Call of the May Day Dancers.' It is so truly melodious, truly vocal, truly sprightly, and makes an irresistible appeal. May I congratulate you warmly on this splendid composition!"

Yours very heartily,
PERCY GRAINGER.
This song has just been accepted as the test piece by the New York delegation to the Biennial in San Francisco in June, and Dr. Chapman has been invited to conduct it there. All congratulations are due to the President, officers and conductor for such an auspicious ending of the forty-fourth season of the Rubinstein Club.

Earliest Use of Horse

Probably for Warfare

In Babylon the first domesticated horse appeared about 2000 B. C. It was introduced into Egypt by the Hyksos, or shepherd kings, who came from the north and east of Syria, and conquered lower Egypt in the Seventeenth century B. C. In both these cases it is to be noted that the horse was preceded by many centuries by the ox and the ass. From these facts and a few other scraps of evidence one may picture the first domestication of the horse as occurring in central Asia. Probably it was accomplished by a people of nomadic herds, men to whom the convenience of riding would be obvious. Somewhere or later the mounted nomad came to realize the measure of his advantage over the men who traveled and fought afoot, and was encouraged to wander farther afield, conquering as he went. In any case, the horse (either as a charger or yoked to a chariot) became in very early times an important factor in war. The use of the horse for the workaday purpose of transport and tillage is comparatively a modern development. In Britain, for example, even were the common slow animals until the end of the Eighteenth century.

How Famous Club Got Name

The Jacobins, the most famous political club in France at the time of the revolution of 1793, received its name from the fact that it rented the refectory of the Jacobins in the Rue St. Honoré, near the seat of the national assembly in Paris, was an office in Paris for the Jacobins. The club originated in the club house, established at Jacobins church after the closing of the state assembly in 1793. At first composed of deputies from Brittany, it soon was joined by others from various parts of France. Mischief and dissipation were early noted at it. When the national assembly went to Paris the club followed it and took up its quarters in the refectory of the Jacobins after which it took its name.

How Moon Travels

The moon rotates on its axis in exactly the same period in which it revolves around the earth—namely, approximately 27 1/3 days. The same side turned toward the earth is not true in the strictest sense, it would be true if the plane, or its orbit and of its equator were the same and if it moved at a perfectly uniform angular velocity in its orbit. Thus, at certain times the observer is able to see farther around the illuminated side than at others and that there is only 41 per cent of its surface which is never seen, while 41 per cent is never seen in light and 18 per cent is never seen in shadow and sometimes visible.

DEALER TELLS OF MODERN TREND IN WHEEL DESIGN

The wheel, one of mankind's oldest and greatest inventions, has usually consisted of many component parts such as hub, spokes, felloe and rim, more or less tightly held together—until Henry Ford developed the Ford one-piece steel spoke wheel, in which hub, rim and spokes are all welded together by electricity into a strong, one-piece construction.

"Those who have studied the modern trend in architecture, in furniture and decoration and in art have noticed that the fundamental idea is to express the practical strength of this sturdy mechanical idea in as simple and as beautiful manner as possible, by simple rather than by pretentious designs," said Arthur Herrick, of Herrick Bros. Co., local Ford dealers.

"With its clean-cut construction and straightforward simplicity of design, in which each spoke shows the line of direction of a force, what could be more modern than the design of the Ford one-piece steel spoke wheel?"

"Engineers well know the fundamental strength of a triangle, as compared with the inherent weakness of a square. A simple illustration of this is a square farm gate, which is very weak until we convert it into two triangles by placing a diagonal brace across the gate from one corner to the other. Or notice the triangles in a structural steel bridge, the roof trusses of a barn or factory, or in the corner bracing of a building.

"Now let's notice how the scientific placing of the steel spokes in the Ford wheel forms triangles that brace and strengthen the wheel from every direction. For example, take two adjacent spokes extending outwardly from near the hub cap to the rim. See how these two spokes form the sides of a triangle, while that section of the rim that is between them is the base of the triangle. The spokes adjacent inner and outer spokes, how they form another triangle with the hub serving as the base.

"These triangles in the Ford steel spoke wheel are so beautifully arranged that even though one spoke is eliminated, the triangles on both sides will still be perfect and well able to take care of any reasonable load. In fact, to demonstrate the strength of the Ford steel spoke wheel, one leader deliberately cut away half of the spokes of such wheel and drove with safety on the remaining spokes. That this is possible is evident when we consider that each of the sturdy one-fourth inch diameter steel spokes is capable of carrying a load of 4,000 pounds and even with half of the spokes removed, there are never less than three spokes to carry the weight on each wheel, irrespective of how the wheel is turned."

Two Ball Tickets for Three

By H. LOUIS RAYBURN

JERRY JOSLIN'S career which had continued street up the two flights with his off-the-hill bedroom, under the door. Among the plump bearing a return and unmistakably proclaimed to be pink, green and yellow blank for the season's ball games.

The question of the very of all had been in the back of Jerry's mind for some time. Had figured it could stay in ground under the application arrived. And here they were, he had gone for his evening into northern Connecticut there was a brook famed for. And it was while standing in that brook, playing a yellow, that his foot crevice of rock, wrenching severely.

During a temporary invasion woman who ran the Tor where he was handling hand good to him and her daughter, had offered the only. She had read to him, played and allowed him to fire a moment of gratitude for access he promised to take big game.

How could he know that time came, Leonore would to a dim memory, and ners would fill his entire.

Unfortunately, there was to it than the mere questing good the promise when interested in another girl. association had seen fit to nearly the price of tickets purchase of two of them thing to a young man who tice was just beginning. would be other expenses for flowers, candy, for denying himself a few mra. But to sacrifice for that was another story.

Yet he had no choice to and, sitting down at what a writing table, he filled plication, enclosing check, a brief note to Leonore.

What consolation he got was of short duration, reply followed his letter.

"Dear Jerry:

It is so nice about the looking forward. Hope having lovely weather. My ing with me.

Your old friend, Leonore

It was quite evident the country girl did not know outs of the ticket game, plainly she was unwary hold of extra tickets man passages into heaven or through needle eyes mere.

Yet, remembering the mother had been kind to that all he could do was his own seat in some of the two women would uncomfortable by suspected reason.

Leonore blushed and hand a little, but the mother noted as a previous thing demonstrative.

He left them at the big enclosure, having understood that his cheering section and that there was of utmost importance.

Then he sauntered around the stadium to the parked cars huddled like flocks.

Suddenly he heard him and turned quickly.

There sat Gloria, charming, at the wheel of a roadster. Amazed, he her at once "Gloria! What think—"

"That I'd be safe in and she sighed "you asked me that. If I where is that pretty in came in with a few min and then Jerry told story from beginning to end.

When he had finished, him thoughtfully "I stand what had become said, "I was curious to were taking anyone to knowing what section allotted tickets in the ground on the chance by."

"Gloria!" cried Jerry to all that—why, my dear mean the most wonderful world!"

And evidently it climbed into the road were two people that wouldn't have changed yelling, singing crowds.

As for Leonore, she aside just before getting "Hope you didn't mind mother, but you see I Wallis Stone back I wouldn't let me come in her, too."

"Thank heaven you Jerry, so fervently the puzzling about it yet.

Birth of Great The pneumatic tire by a Dublin veterinary to please his son, who bicycle on hard strips

Two Ball Tickets for Three

By H. LOUIS RAYBOLD

(C. 1931, McClure Newspaper Syndicate.) (WNU Service.)

JERRY JOSLIN'S carefree whistle, which had continued from the street up the two flights which led to his off-the-hall bedroom, was checked by the sight of his mail, pushed in under the door. Among other envelopes was one that was long and plump bearing a return address which unmistakably proclaimed the contents to be pink, green and yellow application blanks for the season's big football games.

The question of the very last game of all had been in the background of Jerry's mind for some time, but he had figured it could stay in the background until the applications actually arrived. And here they were, reminding him of last summer's folly.

He had gone for his vacation far up into northern Connecticut where there was a brook famed for its trout. And it was while standing knee deep in that brook, playing a gamey old fellow, that his foot caught on a crevice of rock, wrenching his ankle severely.

During a temporary invalidism, the woman who ran the "Tourists' Rest" where he was boarding had been very good to him and her daughter, Leonore, had offered the only diversion. She had read to him, played cribbage and allowed him to flirt mildly. In a moment of gratitude for their kindnesses he promised to take her to the big game.

How could he know that, when that time came, Leonore would have faded to a dim memory, and Gloria Manners would fill his entire horizon?

Unfortunately, there was also more to it than the mere question of making good the promise when he was interested in another girl. The athletic association had seen fit to double very nearly the price of tickets and the purchase of two of them meant something to a young man whose law practice was just beginning. And there would be other expenses as well. Taxi fare, flowers, candy, it could imagine denying himself a few meals for Gloria. But to sacrifice for Leonore—that was another story.

Yet he had no choice in the matter and, sitting down at what passed for a writing table, he filled out his application, enclosing check, and wrote a brief note to Leonore.

What consolation he managed to get was of short duration. A prompt reply followed his letter.

"Dear Jerry: It is so nice about the game. Am looking forward. Hope we 'peep on having lovely weather. Mother is coming with me."

Your old friend,
Leonore Tucker."

It was quite evident that the little country girl did not know the ins and outs of the ticket game. No, all too plainly she was unaware that getting hold of extra tickets made rich men's passages into heaven or cannels going through needle eyes mere child's play.

Yet, remembering that Leonore's mother had been kind to him, he knew that all he could do was to give up his own seat in some such way that the two women would not be made uncomfortable by suspecting the real reason.

Leonore blushed and squeezed his hand a little, but the presence of her mother acted as a preventive of anything demonstrative.

He left them at the portal of the big enclosure, having given them to understand that his seat was in the cheering section and that his presence there was of utmost moment.

Then he sauntered across the trampled mud to the space where the parked cars huddled like gigantic turtles.

Suddenly he heard his name called and turned quickly.

There sat Gloria, looking very charming, at the wheel of her little roadster. Amazed, he went over to her at once. "Gloria! What—I should think—"

"What did he say inside? Well—" and she sighed—"you see nobody asked me! But, if I may inquire, where is that pretty little blond you came in with a few minutes ago?"

And then Jerry told her the whole story from beginning to end.

When he had finished, she looked at him thoughtfully. "I couldn't understand what had become of you," she said. "I was curious to know if you were talking anyone to the game and knowing what section your class was allotted to, I thought I'd hang around on the chance you might go by."

"Gloria!" cried Jerry. "If you went to all that—oh, my darling, it must mean the most wonderful thing in the world!"

And evidently it did, for Jerry climbed into the roadster and there were two people that afternoon who wouldn't have changed places with the yelling, singing crowds.

As for Leonore, she managed an aside just before getting on the train. "Hope you didn't mind my bringing mother, but you see I'm engaged to Willie Stone back home and he wouldn't let me come unless I brought her, too."

"Thank heaven you did!" cried Jerry, so fervently that Leonore is puzzling about it yet.

TRAVEL THE BEAS ON AMERICAN SHIPS

One of the strong supporters of the movement to restore the American merchant marine to the front rank in world shipping is Assistant Postmaster General W. Irving Glover, chairman of an interdepartmental sub-committee to encourage the use of American ships.

Not long ago Mr. Glover learned that several hundred postmasters and their wives in this country were planning a summer outing to Germany and other European countries, and that they were arranging to travel on a foreign flag ship. The Assistant Postmaster General made it his business to get in contact with these in charge of the tour and now this group will sail across the Atlantic and back on a ship of the United States line.

When Mr. Glover asked the leader of the group of postmasters why his party intended to patronize a foreign flag ship, the answer was that it was either English or German ships.

"I can forgive that man for making such a mistake," said Mr. Glover, "but it is very difficult for me to overlook the recent sailing on a foreign flag ship of two members of Congress who are great friends of the American merchant marine on the floors of Congress."

The decision of the United States flag Association, through its president, Gen. James A. Mox, to carry a party of American boys and girls to Europe this summer on a vessel flying a foreign flag, has caused much unfavorable comment in official circles in Washington. The youngsters making the trip will be the winners in a nation wide essay contest on the American flag. The government is leading millions of dollars at low rates of interest for the construction of American ships, besides awarding mail contracts to build up our merchant marine.

WHEN THE REVOLUTION ENDED

The cessation of hostilities between the United States and Great Britain was proclaimed April 19, 1783, to the soldiers of the Continental army by order of General George Washington in headquarters at Newburgh. Congress had issued, a few days before the official notification that the Revolutionary war was at an end.

The 148th anniversary of Washington's proclamation is noted by the Division of Information and Publication of the George Washington Bicentennial Commission in a statement recalling the event.

The Revolution had practically ended with the surrender of Lord Cornwallis at Yorktown in October, 1781. It was generally realized throughout the two countries that there would be no more extensive campaigns, but both armies were retained under arms. A few skirmishes took place in 1782, occurring for the most part between foraging or scouting parties.

In one of these minor fights in August some British soldiers at Saint James Island, South Carolina, were defeated by Captain Wilmott. At Fort Mifflin, Virginia, in the following month, the last skirmish of the war was fought. It also was a victory for the Americans.

While there was little to be gained by either side from this kind of fighting it was an inevitable result of the proximity of armed men representing the two nations. It was unavoidable as long as Britain and the United States were officially at war.

Despite this fact Washington vigorously opposed any reduction in the army until the conclusion of peace. No one realized the cost of victory better than the man who led America's armies throughout the war. He was unwilling that the fruits of victory should be lost by a relaxation of vigilance which might encourage the British ministry to continue the conflict.

Washington's feelings on receiving official notice that hostilities were at an end may be seen in his proclamation at Newburgh. Preliminary articles of peace had been signed at Paris in November and January, and it was beginning to be apparent that the permanent treaty would be based on these stipulations. With considerable relief, therefore, General Washington issued the following order:

"The Commander-in-chief orders the cessation of hostilities between the United States of America and the King of Great Britain to be publicly proclaimed tomorrow at twelve at the New Building; and that the proclamation, which will be communicated herewith, be read tomorrow morning at the head of every regiment and corps of the army; after which, the chaplains with the several brigades, will render thanks to Almighty God for all his mercies, particularly for his preserving the peace of mind to the army, and for causing the rage of war to cease among the nations."

"On such a happy day, which is the birthday of peace, a day which even gives the eighth part of the war, it would be regrettable and to repeat it would be impossible and to partake of it, in the general felicity."

"Happy, three happy, shall flow to pronounced hereafter, who have contributed anything in protecting the meanness of freedom and independence on the broad basis of independence, who have assisted in protecting the rights of human nature, and established an asylum for the poor and oppressed of all nations and religions."

RURAL BILLBOARDS

MUST SURELY GO

The fight is on to a finish to abolish the disgusting and rising billboard in the highways of the United States, and it is highly significant that the rural people have elected the grandest campaign in the past two or three years. Local groups are taking action to abolish a billboard, which is a real nuisance to the rural people, and a menace to the anti-billboard crusade.

The anti-billboard crusade is a real fight, and it is a fight that is being fought in every part of the country. The billboard is a real nuisance to the rural people, and it is a menace to the anti-billboard crusade.

Rowe Hill, Greenwood

Sunshine, rain, hail, snow, and wind all in one day, what more can we ask for unless it could be slightly warmer! That was the weather Monday.

Mr. Cross and crew are repairing the roads in this neighborhood.

The women are kept busy, keeping track of time. The high school pupils leave on fast time while the farm work is on standard time.

Wesley Ring had the misfortune to cut his foot quite badly last Saturday requiring five stitches to be taken.

Wilmer Bryant and Edgar Dunham worked on the road a few days this week.

Although it was such a rough rainy day Sunday, Mr. and Mrs. Elton Dunham received calls from Mr. and Mrs. Clyde Dunham and children of Howe Hill, Mrs. Elsie Cole and children, Greenwood Centre, and Roy Morgan and family of Greenwood City.

The smelting season ended Saturday night, for which we are not sorry. It has been a nuisance to the people living in this vicinity. Much malicious mischief has been done. When grown men go so far as to cut telephone lines and otherwise disturb and destroy both private and public property, they should be made examples of. We understand the brooks will be closed next year to smelting, and are not sorry.

Mrs. Margaret Bryant spent Saturday with her daughter, Iva Lang, at Bryant Pond.

The pupils of the Bryant school have made a perfect record the three weeks of this term, no one being tardy or absent. One pupil, Edward Libby, brought 15 different blossoms to school Monday in their flower contest. The school is on fast time to a certain extent, beginning at eight o'clock instead of half past.

Wesley Ring sawed and with his machine last week for Elton Dunham, Mount Prospect, Orlan York, and the school wood which the children have all nicely piled in the wood shed.

Ralph Brooks is working in wood stock with the State road crew.

The drama put on by the Sunday School here at the Grange Hall last Friday evening was well attended and we understand they cleared about $14.

NORTHWEST BETHEL

Archer L. Grover of Augusta spent Thursday night with his sister, Mrs. H. A. Skillings, and family.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry Churchill spent Tuesday with her sister, Mrs. I. H. Wilson, and family.

Mr. and Mrs. Byron Abbott and baby of Portland spent the week end with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Brown.

Ed. Rolfe is working for H. A. Skillings.

The United States Joins Great Britain and France in Recognizing the New Spanish Republic—Hoover Upsets Coolidge Precedent.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

President Hoover

WITH the United States, Great Britain, France, and several smaller republics of the world according to the new government at Madrid, headed by Niceto Alcalá Zamora, formal recognition, Spain's republican existence has come promptly into being.

The recognition of the Spanish republic by the British government served to clear the way for similar action by the United States.

Secretary of State Henry L. Stimson instructed the American ambassador to Spain to advise the republican government of the action taken by Washington.

Recognition by the United States was said to have been hastened by the consideration, urged by President Zamora, that a general recognition of the new government by the great powers will tend to strengthen it at home and enable it to maintain order.

Although Ambassador Irwin H. Laughlin is to continue at Madrid for the time being, his permanent retention there will depend upon his acceptability to the republican government.

There have been reports that the ambassador, who is a Pittsburgh steel millionaire, has publicly expressed a low opinion of the republicans forming the new government.

The provisional government announced it would recognize all debts of the monarchy. This resulted in strengthening of stocks and securities on the exchange.

THE federal farm board during the week announced its decision to offer for sale on the European market as rapidly as possible the huge surplus of wheat acquired under the wheat stabilization operations of 1930-1.

It has been estimated the surplus of such wheat controlled by the board will be approximately 275,000,000 bushels by July 1, next.

The board is of the opinion that such sales can be made without depressing domestic wheat prices. The government purchases were made at an average price of about 92 cents a bushel, and the estimate has been made that the board might suffer a loss as high as 50 per cent in sales in this wheat if made in Europe at the present time.

Advice to farmers to store their grain on the farm is extended. It will cost about one-third of the regular carrying charges, if the wheat is stored on the farm itself. The attempted solution of the problem so far as the board has worked it out appears to be that the board is going to try to load its surplus when and where it can, so far as it can without bringing about too great a slump in the market.

The farmer is then to be asked to help carry the load of the coming crop and the board will offer him a tentative promise of aid, through co-operatives, suggesting an additional incentive to the farmer to join a co-operative.

James S. Stone, chairman of the board, announced that the government had sold 7,000,000 bushels of wheat abroad recently at a figure above the world price decrease of superior product.

THE message of Secretary of State Stimson warning Americans to get out of the interior of bandit-infested Nicaragua was sent to the American legation at Managua and to the American consul at Leon.

The message, drafted by Secretary Stimson after he had been to President Hoover, was as follows:

"In view of outbreaks of banditry in various parts of Nicaragua hitherto free from such violence you will advise American citizens that this government cannot undertake general protection of Americans throughout that country with American forces. To do so would lead to difficulties and complications which this government does not propose to undertake. Therefore, the department recommends to all Americans who do not feel secure under the protection afforded them by the Nicaraguan government through the Nicaraguan National Guard to withdraw from the country, or at least the coast towns whence they can be evacuated in case of necessity. Those who remain do so at their own risk and must not expect American forces to be sent inland to their aid."

Six years ago Calvin Coolidge, then president, affirmed in an address in New York what he called the "distinct obligation on the part of respecting governments to afford protection to the persons and property of their citizens, wherever they may

This American doctrine Stimson now amends. American protection, by the new policy, follows American citizens ashore, but not to the interior of rebel-infested Nicaragua.

It is interesting at this time to see the announcement that the Soviet government has decided to adopt a new wage system, known as the "Khozraschot," which apparently changes the government's policy and amplifies the inauguration of piece work.

It is to go into effect at once. The wages of workers, according to Soviet authorities, will not be based on the communist theory of equal division, but on the capitalist idea of rewarding individual efforts in skill and ability.

The word Khodzraschot literally means "economic accounting." It is interpreted in the decree to mean that each factory, plant, collective farm, mine, railroad and such hereafter must take the responsibility of fulfilling contracts and adjusting wages without interference from trade unions.

Although certain elements among the disciples of Lenin view the innovation regretfully as a compromise with capitalism, the government hopes the system will speed up production. Leaders affect to see the Khodzraschot as tending to eliminate waste and fix responsibility for managers and workers.

HIGH place in the list of encouraging comments on the business situation is accorded that of Roger W. Babson, the trade prophet, who told President Hoover that better times are on the way. Business, he said, has turned the corner and now is definitely on the up-grade.

"In almost every line of industry there are some concerns which, in March, showed an increase in earnings over February. What is more important, they showed an increase for this March over March of last year. Certain of the railroads also have turned the corner," he said.

Mr. Babson has earned the right to be listened to when he ventures upon the thin ice of economic prognosis. Statistics being his daily diet, he asks the country to observe the statistics of car-loadings. Those are steadily increasing. They have always been of barometrical significance. When freight is moving factories are working and shipping, merchants are buying and customers are consuming. In every key industry statistics show that one or two big firms have turned the corner, promising that smaller fry, too, are headed out of the red.

If the American people turn their gaze from the "big board" in Wall Street to the bigger opportunities which await them in constructive directions of every sort, the upturn foreseen by Mr. Babson will come all the sooner and all the surer.

RECOGNITION of the imperative necessity of solving the problem of unemployment is seen in the complete reorganization of the United States employment service, with 48 state employment bureaus and one in the District of Columbia and seven special central divisions established to deal with the problems of various trades, announced by William H. Bank, secretary of labor.

John H. Albino of New York will head the new set up, which has $300,000 of appropriations available for its work. Francis I. Jones is to continue as director general, with supervision also over the special training and qualifying trades division. The Veterans placement service will be maintained, nation-wide in its scope, and the farm employment service will be expanded.

"The United States employment service has decided," Secretary Bank's announcement said, "to open up at least one employment bureau in each of the states and the District of Columbia to co-operate with state and local authorities."

A co-ordinated service throughout the entire country will undertake in the broadest sense to take care of interstate labor placements in co-operation with employers and employees, giving employers a ready field from which to draw all needed labor necessary to carry forward any kind of work."

MUCH to the surprise of financial circles, stockholders of the United States Steel corporation adopted a proposed pension plan under which James A. Farrell, president, and for several years a leading figure in the steel industry, would automatically retire on reaching the age of seventy or in 1933.

Mr. Farrell was a leader of those in favor of the new plan, pointing out that the old one had been unsatisfactory.

There are others in the great United States Steel corporation who will retire if the plan is adopted. It provides for voluntary retirement, and 70 for compulsory.

In this class soon would fall E. J. Bullington, president of Illinois Steel; Joshua A. Hatfield, president of American Bridge; Ward B. Perley, president of Canadian Steel; J. S. Keefe, president of American Steel & Wire, and E. W. Pargy, president of American Sheet & Tin Plate. All these are subsidiaries. The retirements would fall between 1933 and 1935.

It was pointed out that Mr. Gary as chairman of the board of directors worked at his steel until he died—ten years later than the proposed retirement plan would require.

It may be that some other plan will affect Mr. Farrell—that he, too, may carry on—but the pension plan says 70.

Ramsay MacDonald

George, whose Liberal following holds the balance of power in the house of commons, turned the tide to MacDonald when he denounced the Conservative motion as unfair. Of 53 Liberal votes, MacDonald received 35, the Conservatives only 10, the remainder not voting or absent.

Quite evidently, Great Britain is in no mood to fall victim to political spellbinding. It knows that none of the political leaders possesses a magic wand that can charm away the disastrous consequences of the war. The nation must climb a long and weary trail, and it is prepared to do so.

Doubtless the Indian situation, which has been one of the chief causes for the depression in the British textile industry because of the Indian boycott on British goods, was an important consideration with the Liberals in supporting MacDonald.

BELIEF that the revolution in Honduras is related with operations of the insurgents under Augustino Sandino in Nicaragua has gained ground among observers of Central American politics.

It is pointed out that Gen. Gregorio Ferrera, head of the revolutionary movement in Honduras, is openly opposed to United States intervention activities, sharing Sandino's views in this regard.

Ferrera was in Mexico a year ago. He is of Indian blood and has a large following among the laborers on the large United States banana plantations of the north coast of Honduras.

Dr. Jesus Castro, Honduran charge d'affaires at Mexico City, who recently returned from a visit to Tequigolpa, said President Mejia Collinprez refused to admit Ferrera into his cabinet was the probable cause of the revolution. He is confident it will fall, as the President has an influential backing and a well-trained army.

Dr. Vicente Mejia Collinprez was named President of Honduras in the last election and was inaugurated on February 3, 1929. Municipal elections last December gave the Liberal party a majority.

Julius G. Lay, United States minister in Honduras, reported to the State department that, in his opinion, the revolt would soon "fizzle out." He said no military or political figures of consequence appear to be connected with it.

Fausto Davila is the premier and foreign minister of Honduras, and is considered by South American diplomats at Washington as well able to deal with the situation.

A STATEMENT setting out the attitude of Newton D. Baker of Cleveland, former secretary of war, toward talk of his candidacy for the Democratic nomination for the Presidency is accepted by politicians as clearing the atmosphere.

Issued by W. B. Conger, an Ohio Democratic leader, after a conference with Mr. Baker, the statement indicated that the ex-secretary will not do anything to obtain the nomination but he will not refuse it should it come to him if the Democratic nation at convention is unable to agree on any of the active candidates.

During the scramble for delegates to the convention Mr. Baker will not use his influence in behalf of any particular candidate.

The statement also said: "The many kind things said about Newton D. Baker as a possible Democratic candidate for the Presidency are certainly gratifying to Mr. Baker's friends and naturally to him. In my conversation with Mr. Baker he has shown very great interest in the party's platform, but no interest in possible candidates and I do not believe he has changed his former judgment on the subject. This has always been that he had no desire for further political preferment of any kind."

This Nevada Town Thinks It Is a Real Utopia

It's eye view of the little town of Rupe, Nev., which lays claim to being the ideal place in the United States for persons of a certain liberal turn of mind. It has no mayor, no sheriff, no churches, and no enforcement of the eighteenth amendment. Rupe is a short distance from Ruth, which has the largest open pit mine in the world.

CHURCH ACTIVITIES

FIRST CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH

L. A. Edwards, Pastor
This church will follow the lead of the schools, mills, and stores. Whatever time the village is on, that will be the church time. Govern yourselves accordingly.

It was the intention of the pastor to ask his people to set all services of the church one hour earlier than has been the custom, as most transients who pass through Bethel, and who desire to attend church, are on fast time; but as matters now seem to be shaping themselves, that seems unnecessary.

9:30. Church School. Miss Ida Packard, superintendent.

10:45. Morning Worship. Pastor's subject will be "Walking with God."

6:30. Meeting of the comrades of the Way. Subject for discussion will be "How wisely do we use money?"

We expect to entertain the Gorham Chapter of Comrades so let us be out in full force and give them a Royal Welcome.
